VISITOR FROM OHIO BOOSTING MIRROR

About 500 persons left Toronto on Tuesday last on the first "home-seekers" excursion for the West. They were practically all farmers from the settled parts of Ontario.

The Williams jewelry store at Wetaskiwin was partially destroyed and the stock damaged by fire last Friday morning. The loss is about $3,000.

GRAIN MARKETED IS GRADING 2 AND 3

A letter has been received from Frank Pohs, of Cleveland, Ohio, whom, it will be remembered was a visitor in Mirror last October, and who invested at the time in $1,000 worth of residential property. In his letter he states that he is proceeding satisfactorily with his arrangements for a clay brick and cement brick plant. Several minor details are yet lacking, but on the completion of these Mr. Pohs expects to get right down to business.

He says further: "The people here are very sceptical regarding Western Canada, but if everybody would be as enthusiastic as I am you would have a couple of thousand people in Mirror next fall. However, I have been busy since I came back from your town, in talking to friends and people of the advantages of your country and have advertised Mirror to quite an extent. I have interested people to look into the progress of Western Canada, especially Mirror. The sooner you get something started in the manufacturing line, the sooner things will come."

Mr. Pohs holds the responsible position of general manager of the Cleveland Enameling works, but after a visit to Mirror, concluded that the opportunities existing in Mirror were of too advantageous a character to allow to pass.

The erection of a brick plant in Mirror is only one of many industries that there are openings for, but as Mr. Pohs states, the sooner one starts the sooner the rest will come.

BOARD OF TRADE

A well attended meeting of the Mirror Board of Trade was held in the Trans. Townsite Co.'s office on March 4th last.

A. Thomas was in attendance to speak on the proposition for opening up the road north, running east of Spotted Lake, which runs up to Messrs. R. S. Cairns, H. Moren, D. S. Gardiner and others in that district.

There was a very large amount of correspondence received since the last meeting. That spoke well of the advertising Mirror is getting in the U. S. A.

The grading of the roads running north of Lamerton up past Messrs. C. R. Brewster, J. C. Atkinson, E. M. Hutchinson, G. Neis, Geo. Peterson, A. J. Ray, and others, and also the road east from Lamerton, past L. O. Phelps, H. C. Brewster, was discussed and it was decided to do much as possible to get these roads in good order for the coming summer.

The matter of school debentures was discussed and the Secretary was instructed to write to the trustees asking them to make public their plans and amount of revenue, etc.

THREE HORSES KILLED ON RAILWAY

Last Friday night while the G. T. P. mixed was pulling in from the north, the train ran into three horses, killing them instantly. The animals were the property of Jas. MacLaren and were valued at $150 each. They had been on the roadway but strayed onto the railway right-of-way, and the train coming along chased them as far as the bridge crossing Spotted Creek. As they could go no farther, the engine collided with the beasts, killing the three outright. The engineer failed to see the horses until he was right on top of them and it was too late to apply the brakes.

It will mean quite a loss to Mr. MacLaren, providing the railway company do not recognize his claim for damages.

KING PANTOMIME REIGNS

Deaths Young and Old in London and Barts $20,000 Each Week

London.—All hail to—the good King Christian IX, the man as earth-born monarch, probably who would envy King Pantomime who, in his heart, gossiped over in the parlor, hoped to be a king. He was a man who wondered at the theatre and haunted over till the tears ran down young men's faces. He was a man who, with his tinsel crown askew, his shining scepter and his jolly red nose, his rosy cheeks and his white whiskers, his halo of dandizement and delights.

In the still, practical matter of income there is probably hardly a single living sovereign who can rival him in wealth. His annual income for seats at the pantomimes in London and its suburbs alone, may be between £10,000 and £15,000 a week. But with all his lavish jollity and spleen, he is a rich man and fondly sole in the sixpenny and threepenny gallery he is as popular as ever. To him, the boxes of the richest patrons are the boxes of the stalls.

At the same time, in his own home and to his own people he is an exacting, domineering—worn out by age. All through these weeks of preparation, how many thousands of boys and girls, and mothers and choristers have been working night and day at the boxes of the stalls, and the boxes of a pantomime as well as a theatrical. Many a despairing Christmaseater, many a deadpanned matinée-goer, many a pale-faced fair-warmer, who helps to make both ends meet and have a comfortable existence.

On the whole, said a well-known manager yesterday, pantomime is a money-making business rather than a money-making art. The manager's work to just the people who want it most, at the time they want it most. And the manager's work is to see that the final rehearsals draw near and a cold comedy, waiting always in the wings, is there to follow. But hard work breaks no bones. How ever much harder people are made to work, never in my life heard an actor complain of it. The manager's work is to see that the boxes of the stalls are tenanted by able actors and actresses who happen to be in the right place at the right time.

Some of them, of course, can manage to adapt themselves to the taste of the public, and the manager and the heavy man, who has ambitions and no particular popularity, can manage to get along.

It was a pure love match, differing from the unions between royal families, in that the two were arranged for political expediency. They were wed at Cannes on April 28, 1898, and the couple have been happy ever since. On March 11, 1899, now that the crown prince and King Christian Frederik Michael, born July 1, 1900, is now too well how lucky he is to get it!

On the other hand, pantomime has its disadvantages in some directions. While it is a shower of gold for the manager, it is a deluge of trouble for the welcome to the average comic man, the 'hero' and chorister, the leg-puller and the jester, the clown, who wants to be in an established London success, has a poor time of it. With pantomime, however, the manager's work in the theatres in all the principal towns, it is natural that for these reasons the manager is apt to terminate his contract with the Comedians.

While it is a shower of gold for the manager, it is a deluge of trouble for the welcome to the average comic man, the 'hero' and chorister, the leg-puller and the jester, the clown, who wants to be in an established London success, has a poor time of it.

With pantomime, however, the manager's work in the theatres in all the principal towns, it is natural that for these reasons the manager is apt to terminate his contract with the Comedians.

TEMPORARY ADDITION TO THE SINGLE TAX.

While in the majority of cases the single tax principle embodied in the Alberta Towns Act, passed at the last session of the legislature, is working out well, there are a few towns which, having committed themselves to large expenditures before the adoption of single tax system, have been unable to adjust themselves easily to the new system.

In order to give relief in these cases an amendment to the Towns act will be introduced by the minister of municipalities, Hon. Chas. Stewart, giving such towns as feel themselves in need of additional revenue, authority to impose a temporary business tax to be computed at a percentage of the rental value of the premises occupied.

The period for which this permission will be given is three years and a further extension for another three years may be asked for if found necessary. Towns may also apply for authority to impose a poll tax on persons resident in the town or three months prior to Oct. 1, and who are not on the assessment roll. The demand for the institution of the poll tax comes from small mining towns, where real estate is only of small value, because the existence of town is dependent upon the operation of the mines.

The relief afforded by the business tax is only regarded as temporary and it is expected that after the first period of three years the towns adopting it will not require further relief in this way, but will have adjusted themselves to the single tax system.

There will be other amendments prohibiting bonusing of industries.

PROTECT FARM MACHINERY

A manufacturer of farm machinery says that if the farmer took as good care of his implements as the manufacturer did of his factory machinery his value would drop off nearly one-half. A farm machine often suffers more depreciation when neglected during the winter than it would in two seasons of hard usage.

Nearly all farm machinery will stand a great many years of use if properly housed and cared for. The ordinary farmer gets only about one-third the service from his farm machinery that he should. The average life of a binder is from five to six years, but when properly housed and the necessary repairs made promptly, instances are on record where they have given twenty years of service.

A good coat of paint adds very materially to the appearance of a machine and pays for itself many times over in keeping the wood parts from rotting and the iron from rusting. In applying paint, remember that one coat of thin paint applied every year is much better than one coat of thick paint applied every two years.

The thing which should receive first consideration in the care of farm machinery is a good dry shed to protect them from the weather. The life of a machine is increased many times by proper housing and care when not in use. It is not necessary to have an expensive building. All that is required is one that will keep out the moisture and direct rays of the sun. Dryness prevents rust and decay.

The time to make a machine ready for next season is not when you have the leisure to do it. It should be attended to at the moment you haul it from the field after you have finished with it. It is not a wise plan to put it off. If you wait for a more convenient time you are quite apt to neglect it altogether. Other work will come on and the farmer will consider himself too busy to stop. The consequence is that he has lost a good chance to save himself a lot of labor the next time he needs it.

When a machine is needed it is very often when time is most valuable. If it has been neglected the previous season and left to stand out of doors considerable time must be spent in making repairs and putting it in such a condition so that he can use it. Often broken parts are found which make it necessary to secure repairs before the machine can be used.

Just as necessary as the proper housing of a machine is the prompt repairing of all broken and missing parts. Every bolt in a farm machine is put there for a definite purpose and if broken or lost an undue strain is put on another part, often resulting in a serious breakage and loss in both time and money, for break-downs always occur in the midst of a busy season.

All expense incurred in housing, painting and repairing farm tools will come back tenfold in actual dollars and cents to the owner, besides the satisfaction of always knowing that the tools are ready and in good condition when they are wanted.

PANAMA CANAL WILL HELP ALBERTA

Montreal—Hon. C. W. Cross, attorney-general of Alberta, who was here today en route for New York, says that the chief feature of the session which opened last week at Edmonton is the elevator policy by which the government will practically build 40 elevators at a cost of $25,000,000. He said that there was still a good deal of wheat in the province, in spite of the great quantities stored at Fort William. The attorney-general said that they were anxiously awaiting the opening of the Panama Canal, for, being nearer the ports of Vancouver and Prince Rupert than any other western province, the British market would be more easily reached by that route.

To the query "what is money anyway?" the following answers are made:

The best talking machine.

Bait for the matrimonial hook.

The most effective substitute for brains.

Something that always gets the glad hand.

Is the most difficult root to cultivate.

That women look for while men sleep.

What the rich don't need and the poor don't get.

Metal often manufactured from "water" in Wall Street.

A curse to some who have it, and a curse to all who haven't.

A provider for everything but happiness, a passport to everywhere but heaven.

The one thing that makes crooked things straight and straight things crooked.

That which speaks a language we can all understand, but in which so few are able to converse.

And then he tries the steering gear, but finds no trouble there, till wet with perspiration, then, he quits in sheer despair.

He sits beside the road to give his leaning head time to cool,

And ponders on his failing at the correspondence school.

And then he starts the job once more until by chance 'tis seen

The cause of all his trouble is—he's out of gasoline.

HELD BY A COBRA.

Agency of a Prisoner in a Military Jail in India.

In the military cantonments of India the punishment cells, which are about sixteen feet long and twelve feet square, stand separately. There are no windows, but one side is a grille, the iron bars being about five inches apart.

On one occasion when a private was confined in one of these large cells, one of the most deadly reptiles in India, the cobra, had crawled in and wriggled on the bed to get warmth. It curled upon the prisoner's chest, and he was just about to turn over when the colonel, who had had enough punishment in the terrible experience he had gone through, told him to lie back again.

At 8 o'clock, when the sergeant went his rounds, he saw the position the prisoner was in and went to him. With a bayonet he entered the cell, and then drove the snake into a corner, where they killed it. The colonel released the prisoner, who had had enough punishment in the terrible experience he had gone through. The man's hair had turned white with the mental strain which he had endured.—London Standard.

Keep the Bacon at Home

Remember when Jack Johnson, the black man, bruised Jim Jeffries at Reno! He wired his mother, "I'm bringing home the bacon." In this case "the bacon" was a large bunch of money.

It is a wise plan to keep the bacon at home. Money in circulation around home is much more useful to yourself and your community than it is if it circulates at a distance.

This is merely a hint in favor of Home Trade against the Mail Order habit.

Chase's Nerve Food is a means of helping up the system and removing the cause of headaches, sleeplessness and nervousness.

Mr. Charles Donner, Klingenberg, Ont., writes: "With complete relief I received a cure which I received from Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. For over two years my appetite was always poor, and the stomach bad. I took medicine from physicians and was rarely free from them."

Read again Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I used it with little idea of what would be beneficial. I had become this and that, and with continued treatment I have been cured and feel as well as new. The Archduchess Eleonore, eldest daughter of the Archduke Karl Stephen of Austria, was the possessor of Alfonso von Kloss. It was during a cruise that she met her future husband, the Archduke Karl Stephen of Austria, who was the son of Emperor Franz Joseph, belonging to the archduces' father.

The young pair became engaged.

They had a happy life together.

Finally, seeing that she had fallen in love with him, he project, they gave their consent to the match, while the emperor, who invariably favored his son, reluctantly consented at a special audience to the archduke, who earnestly pleaded on behalf of his son.

Alfonso von Kloss, will be known as Frau von Kloss, will have no claims on the rank of imperial princess, but the emperor may follow his usual custom of making some special provision for the young pair, and raise them in rank.

Ingenious Scheme of Swindling Conceived by匪 in India Now in Custody

Constitutional is caused in Finnish financial world by what would seem to be the greatest swindle ever perpetrated in Finland.

The affair has for the moment eclipsed the all-absorbing developments in the political field with the exception of the war.

M. Niila Imanen, manager of the Tammerfora branch of the local Post Office, received a few days ago by the police orders received from the head office in Helsinki, to pay off all debts of the bank.

Post office officials were told to pay off debts of $1,000,000 and $2,000,000, and to hand over the dishonest deals with private people.

A Singular Call

It Came From One Who Had Seemed Ungrateful

By F. TOWNSEND SMITH

I was starting for the office of the Henderson Wrecking company by whom I was employed as a diver, when a boy stepped up to me and handed me a telegram.

"Also is coming the Captain's Champus. Come quickly and get out."

MABEL.

I ran for the station to take a train for Clapham and found one made up to start in twenty minutes. But it seemed like hours before we were pulling out of the station on a fifty mile trip. "Well, I came to make it I will tell you," I said to the telegrapher.

I reached Clapham in time to see Captain. One day in the school yard I saw one of the boys take a doll from a little girl, pinching it by its legs, he seemed to clinch his fist so hard, sandy ground. I walked up to the boy and without saying a word struck him so hard that he dropped the doll, at which I got the credit of having thrashed my antagonist. But this was rather because the boy I fought was the one who was making things for no cause whatever I gained over him.

The little girl whom I had before surprised me after the fight by making a face at me. Children are but ungrateful creatures, and I was sorry for my reporting her. It was treatment like interfering in family feuds, for everybody knows that protection against tyranny is the first duty of each other to defend each other to the perils. Refusing to show any such feeling as I did, I was left with only what was left of my hands in my pockets, whistling a tune to make it appear that it was a natural.

During the rest of my school day I had the mortification to experience the ill will of both this boy and girl, both of whom I had been instrumental in getting to like me. To me, it was a period when we were passing out of childhood into youth, and I was not yet strong enough to withstand it. We finished school something about the girl—I knew not what was growing upon me. Her teeth were set like steel, and she would have given my best tennis racket for a smile from her. When our hearts beat together, I could feel myself in love with her. True, I was but sixteen years old, and she twenty, but my experience in the matter has proved that young people are capable of the most violent love.

It was very disconcerting to me to see a girl who had been a friend and whom I loved, not only showing repulsion for me, but lavishing her admiring upon the boy whom malicious creatures had caused me to dislike. In matters of the heart one never knows what a woman will do, and a man is not always safe from her influence. He thinks as it may, I saw my love grow to womanhood, lavishing her affection on the person who had out of pure spite caused me to be disliked.

It was natural for me to see a girl who had been a friend and whom I loved, not only showing repulsion for me, but lavishing her admiring upon the boy whom malicious creatures had caused me to dislike. In matters of the heart one never knows what a woman will do, and a man is not always safe from her influence. He thinks as it may, I saw my love grow to womanhood, lavishing her affection on the person who had out of pure spite caused me to be disliked.

Father thought the two of them not only as best, but after we had become men and women. "The girl I see now is a different person," he said, and I attended their wedding; though rather as her guest than his, for my father was always rather with his family than with me. I was not there. Between us and him that never occurred.

Whether he profited and I regretted it, I do not know. But I did know that after her marriage she treated me in a much more friendly manner.

About the time we finished school and were ready to go to work a ship was sunk in the harbor of Clapham. We had to wait until the tide went down to put the chains under whereby to raise her. There can be nothing more interesting than to see a ship being raised from a ditch until going under water, while those above pump air down to him. We boys were constantly on him watching him, and the pride and consequence of it all was that several of us determined to adopt him as a trade.

This brings me to my telegram. It was from Mabel Granger, the wife of Alec Granger, the two in whose childhood companionship I had interested many a boy. They had been here ever since we left school, and now he, having been caught in a dangerous trap, had to leave me to come to me. During my journey to Clapham I could not drive from my mind that scene in the boat when he, a poor, homeless dog, begged to her house, making a face at me as I moved away, while Alec was bringing the tide off his boat with his hand.

Furthermore, there was every reason to believe that what I said to him to do would do at the risk of my life. If I had told him to go to me, even Alec Granger I would not have been summoned. I was in Mabel's telegraph office for half an hour, writing a cry for help, her distress.

I sat down and waited for my call. A boy came to me reading my story put himself in my place and try to conceive how he would feel if he was in my position. The confusion within me was one predominant sentiment. I was eager to give comfort to the woman I still loved by refusing her husband to her.

When I reached Clapham I found a man waiting for me at the station with a carriage, in which we drove along to the reservoir. On the way we stopped to examine the dam sent down to examine the outflow of water from beneath and while doing so I noted the powerful suction the water had over the dam. The food was escaping. Air was being pumped to him, but it had not been long before he was dead. Two different men had been sent down to him about him a rope strong enough to bear his weight and overcome the suction he had over the dam. I went near him for fear of being sucked into the same position as he. It was upon this information that I realized he was dead. I was too shocked to probably sacrifice my life in attempting to save that of her husband.

On the way back to the room the group that I had been with. Mabel was present, and when my eyes met hers I was at a loss to know what to say. I had expected to see a pathetic appeal. Whether she had an appeal or not I was not able to tell, for her husband, I did not know, nor do I know now. She simply looked at me. Perhaps she considered her telegram an appeal which should be repeated.

At last a five mile pull one June night I lay on the beach, shades of some oily cottonwoods on the lake shore, while I lay back and watched the play of shadows on the calm lake.

A spark near by attracted my attention, and I looked round to see a motor boat was passing by. I was about to call out when I saw Granger lying partly across the hole. After a few moments I thought I should be brought to him.

On the beach I lay down for another two inch rope—heads the one under my arms—looped at the end. I was about to throw the rope wire, but it was not at hand.

"What are you going to do? I was asked.

"There's no way to save him but to go into the auction myself, place the rope under his arm and signal you to draw him up." "I'll do both parts," was the response.

Mabel was looking at me and my eyes met hers. "We must do something," she said. "What was proposed?"

"But what passed between us? Ah, that only we and the Lord know." I had a moment of time to think. I had advanced but a few inches toward Granger than before when I was about to jump in. I had a moment of time to think. I had a moment of time to think that a mountain was on me. I was pulled down on him and so strong was the suction that I was unable to move. I was lowered some distance from the hole through which the water was flowing and was pulled toward it. I began to swim, but I was not strong enough to do so. I swam to the hole. After a few moments I thought I should be brought to him.

A most startling and daring swindle, amounting into thousands and thousands of dollars, which branch banks in Stettler, Lacombe and many other Alberta towns will bear the brunt of the loss, is about to be unearthed. An investigation has been made into the alleged forgery of titles to large tracts of land all over the country, which titles it is claimed were forged on regular paper of the Land Titles office and apparently bore the signature of the registrar and also the government seal. According to officials in the office, the forged titles were sold to speculators who then resold them to bona fide buyers.
